

Jalapeno and the New Normal for 2020/2021

Did you have plans that changed during 2020? Us too! All of April and May had to be canceled due to pandemic related restrictions in the islands. Fortunately, folks are rebooking for the 2020/2021 season. We are optimistically hopeful that some new normal will be in place before the end of the year that will again allow us to sail the entire Eastern Caribbean chain.

Since we were not able to take Jalapeno south as planned, the trip we profiled in Airbnb Adventures from Martinique to St. Lucia did not take place this year. Thus, Jalapeno is currently weathering hurricane season in St. Thomas, not in Grenada.

As we were still in the Virgin Islands for much of the summer, we extend our summer availability a bit and were able to do a couple last minute July charters in the new HOT spot for Caribbean charters - the USVI. With the BVI and other islands closed, the charter business in the USVI was booming for two months. Eventually we had to decommission for hurricane season, back in smokey Reno until fall.

Our 2020/2021 season will start this fall in the Virgin Islands. We will try again to head south in the late spring. There is also a possibility we could do a month or two in the Leeward Islands. Some of you have expressed interest in going to places like St. Kitts, Nevis, Saba, St. Barts, St. Martin and Anguilla. Nobody has booked yet, and if that does not happen, we will still be in the Virgin Islands.

Your airfare risk of having to cancel a charter booking has also been reduced thanks to all the major airlines announcing that they are doing away with rebooking fees.
